Supporting Aboriginal Ways of Knowing

FIRST NATIONS PEDAGOGY ONLINE

Why this project?

- ❖ online delivery of courses specifically targeting Aboriginal learners relatively new in British Columbia and on the increase
- ❖ question of what this means in terms of course design, instructional strategies, and building supportive learning communities, remains a challenge to many instructors
- ❖ Campus 2020: Thinking Ahead report - by 2020 rates of Aboriginal post-secondary participation and attainment will be equal to the rates for the general population

Supporting Aboriginal Ways of Knowing

Our Focus

- ❖ research best practices in developing and implementing online learning opportunities for aboriginal learners
- ❖ develop resources that will support instructors and curriculum designers
- ❖ support dialogue and sharing of ideas across institutions

Elders in Formal and Informal Education

by June Kaminski - Tuesday, 4 March 2008, 06:14 PM

One critical theme that emerged both from the literature AND the First Nations experts who have given us input into this project is the critical importance of Elders in both formal and informal education. How can this be facilitated in the online environment?
